Excerpt: .force the plants on. In the workings of the ground heretofore ploughed, the grass turned under should not be disturbed. Fodder Corn.--If to be cured, the earlier this is sown the better. That for soiling purposes may be sown in succession up to the last of July. The land ought to be well enriched, and in that condition it will yield a great quantity of excellent feed. The best plan for securing the best yield and for convenience in cutting is to sow in drills about three feet apart, the grains being from nine to ten to a foot. Cut when the corn is in full tassel, and put up in small shocks to dry, or pile thickly against the fences. Pumpkins.--These ought not to be overlooked in the provision made for winter feeding. They can be readily grown in with the corn, and are...
