A76398 2009f OCLC Number: (OCoLC)653209520 Subject: United States -- Armed Forces -- Medical care. Excerpt: . . . 11 gramming and budgeting of military construction projects slated for construction beginning with fiscal year 2010. This new system serves all the services by carefully evaluating proposed medical MILCON projects through a rigorous capital in-vestment prioritization method across the entire enterprise. In addition, the new methodology allows more costly projects to receive the funding they need by harnessing the global, enterprise-wide perspective to effectively prioritize scarce resources. Another positive aspect of the CIDM prioritization process is the inclusive representation of those who care for our war fighters as members of the military health systems capital investment review board (CIRB). Clinicians, health system managers, resource managers and health care facility experts from the services and from TMA are all voting members of the capital investment review board. They rep-resent their services or TMA and play pivotal roles in creating an enterprise-wide assessment of projects needed. As Navy Surgeon General, I, as well as my Army and Air Force colleagues, can engage the capital investment decision model proc-ess to clearly articulate our views and priorities to all the members of the CIRB for consideration and deliberation. The CIDM and the CIRB delivered the integrated military health system priority list of projects for the programming period from 2010 through 2015. The services surgeon generals and the TRICARE Management Activity came to a joint agreement on the top priority construction project, and it is the Naval Hospital Guam replacement. This antiquated facility was built in 1954 and has survived 55 years in tropical climates. The new prioritization system allows us to maximize our limited project planning...
