Excerpt: .So off I go; and, having duly dressed and weighed, don my great coat, and wait for the important event of the day. CHAPTER III. who s that young chap? I overhear a horsey-looking customer, in a heavy white great coat and a blue bird s-eye tie (the latter article showing off the brilliant crimson colour of his countenance to much advantage), ask his friend. I niver see im afore to my knowledge. Can he ride any? I try to look as if it was anything but my first appearance in silk; but I fear the attempt is rather a failure. Hang it; I wish I hadn t smoked those two cigars last night, I think to myself. I wonder if Charlie has got a flask in his pocket; I feel as if I should like some jumping powder. Tinkle, tinkle, tinkle, goes the bell again close by. It is the second race; and Charlie was right when he prognosticated a walk over. The dreaded Mr. George rides him, too. Here he comes, and very business-like that gentleman looks--a short stumpy man, with reddish hair and a pair of twinkling eyes that seem to take in everything in one comprehensive glance. Need I say he sports a most elaborate white tie, wears undeniable boots and breeches, and is altogether the perfect model of a gentleman rider. He just trots his horse gently down the course to beyond the gorse-topped hurdles, and then, turning sharp round,...
