Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from A Letter to the Viscount Folkestone: On the Unlawfulness of the Votes of Thanks to Mr. Wardle, and the Late Minority Three years have not elapsed since I had the duty of announcing to your lordship that, with the unanimous voice of all the electors of this city, you were returned by them as a representative of the commons of England in parliament. Of all the duties which I had to discharge in the tenure of a laborious and important office, there was none which afforded me a higher gratification than the business of that day. I thought that I was an instrument of public benefit in proclaiming the delegation of a personage of high dignity and character to assist in the legislation, and to protect the liberties of my country. I thought that the function which your lordship then accepted was national and independent. I knew that you did not enter parliament as an ambassador from the fifty.four persons whose suffrages had entitled you to your seat; I did not consider that to us or to our successors, you were in any degree responsible for the measures you might pursue, or the counsel you might give in that high tribunal.
